Excerpt

From the chapter on pitching:

“ "The most important thing for a pitcher is to have a good fastball. But it's not just about throwing hard. You need to be able to control your fastball and put it where you want it. You also need to have a good changeup and breaking ball to keep hitters off balance." ”

Feller goes on to discuss the importance of mechanics, conditioning, and mental toughness. He also shares some of his own personal experiences, including his famous no-hitter against the New York Yankees in 1940.
